“ In the late nineties, I got Allen a job bussing tables are a restaurant where i was a server. One night we got home late. Allen turned in the TV to see the highlights of the FL/GA game. He saw something he didn't like and with a clenched fist punched downward and uttered a “damn it.” The fist came down at the very same time his short sister (me) came walking by landing right on my head causing me to clink my teeth and chipping the bottom front tooth. So if you've ever talked to me and noticed the jacked up bottom grill, Now ya know.

“ Allen worked with me and my family for a few years and was always a welcome sight even after he moved on to another position. There was one morning in January, before he got his truck, both his car and motorcycle left him needing a ride to work. Does Allen let that stop him?? Nope, at the crack of dawn, here comes a loud scooter sound from down the street. Its Allen, his 6'3 frame squished on a little scooter.. He drove about 35 miles on that thing to get to work. It was a sight! He got the nickname around the shop as Scooter from then on. I have a ton of stories but this is one if my favorites. I miss you Allen!! You will always be my friend and in my heart. Til I see ya again my friend..

“ Remember coming home from work to find my Dad in my driveway. I asked him what's up? He said he was wanting on me to get home from work so I could let Allen out of my trailer. He got blocked in by the a/c he helped our dad install in my trailer. Dads outside in the heat Allen is inside in the cool watching T/V. 😊
