“Maureen was more than my sister-in-law. She was my big sister. I remember as the little girl going and spinning weeks at her house with mama Doyle, and Pops just live in there and occasionally either my mother and Mrs. Doyle turnaround and say you married time to go home. And then I'd go home when George And Maureen got married by the justice of the peace I was there made of honor, but none of her kids ever knew that they only knew about her formal wedding that was done in the church. Now that she's gone, I can give up that secret. I was so honored because I loved Maureen so very much and I also love my brother George. Another story about them was my brother Jon came home on leave and he just happened to call Maureen up and ask if she wanted to go to a movie they did. Jon came back to my mom's house with Maureen after the movie and my brother George had come home on leave and next thing you know George And Maureen left together and Jon was still sitting there at the house, but it seemed to be OK with Jon. Maureen was an amazing wife and mother. And next thing you know George And Maureen left together and Jon was still sitting there at the house, but it seemed to be OK with Jon. Maureen was a amazing wife and mother. I always think she raised those kids by herself George without to see most of the time Maureen raise those kids by herself. George was out to see most of the time I guess when he retired from the Navy that's when he got to come home and be a dad well a full-time dad I always looked up to Maureen. She truly was an amazing woman rest in peace my big sister love you and miss you.
